

„An exceptional role model“

„An exceptional role model“ — international student of „Petroleum chemistry and refining“ program obtains position of senior project engineer at international company in Russia during COVID-2019.

Being a student of the program „Petroleum chemistry and refining“ Brian Munoz Corrales has obtained a position of senior project engineer at the international oilfield services company „AKROS“ in Russia during a pandemic.

Brian has shown that being ambitious and purposeful not only on the issues of study, but also on opportunities to gain professional experience in Russian oil and gas companies is a key to success. Russian oil and gas industry is known to hold one of the leading positions in the global market. Consequently, the experience and skills Brian is going to achieve are highly precious.

As for the studying process, Brian has almost completed his thesis work and is going to pass the rest of the exams after coming back from the shift. The School of Petroleum and Natural gas engineering is always willing to support students and do its best on the way of arranging all conditions for realization of their potentials.
